In the United States, Social Security benefits rise according to increases in the Consumer Price Index, and inflationary prices in recent years caused benefits to rise markedly. The core of the West German problem is a 1957 law that similarly links retirement benefits to rises in the nation's gross wage level. Luns Asserts

BRUSSELS - Joseph Luns, the NATO secretary-general, declared Friday that the "zero option" for reducing the number of medium-range missiles in Europe was "not attainable." Mr. Luns said that a less ambitious proposal might be needed to reach an arms agreement with the Soviet Union, Belgian television reported.

"Practically speaking, we have now realized that the zero option is not attainable because the Russians say 'no,' " Mr. Luns said in remarks to be broadcast Sunday.

An editor at the Belgian network BRT read excerpts of the interview to The Associated Press.

The zero option calls for the North Atlantic Treaty Organizanon to abandon plans to deploy 572 cruise and Pershing-2 missiles over the next five years if the Rus-sians dismantle their force of SS-4. SS-5 and SS-20 rockets targeted on

Western Europe,
But Mr. Luns said: "We are now headed for an interim solution. That means the zero option re-mains as ideal but that in fact we will be satisfied with another solution. That other solution would have to be discussed in consultations with the alliance."

Mr. Luns's remarks were the strongest expression of lack of confidence in the zero option in recent weeks by a member of the alliance's international staff. They echoed the views of some West European leaders seeking to hasten an agreement in the U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva to reduce intermediaterange missiles in Europe.

A special consulting group from the NATO countries met here Friday to advise the U.S. negotiating team. Richard R. Burt, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for European affairs, presided. Mr. Burt said afterward that the

Zero Option France Issues Warrant for Nazi

LYONS (Reuters) — The French magistrate in charge of the case against Klaus Barbie, the convicted Nazi war criminal, issued an international arrest warrant Friday for Paul Touvier, the wartime milita chief in Lyons, who is now living in Italy.

Touvier, who was head of the militia while Barbie led the Gestapo in Lyons, was twice sentenced to death in his absence after the war.

Judicial sources in Lyons said the warrant alleged crimes against humanity that were committed while Touvier was head of the Milice Française, an organization that helped German occupying forces track French Resistance members in World War II: The sources said they believed the new warrant followed fresh evidence brought to hight in the Barbie investigation.

Britain Extends Nkomo's Stay

LONDON (AP) - The Zimbabwe opposition leader, Joshua Nkomo, who arrived in London last Sanday after fleeing to Botswana, has been given permission to remain in Britain until April 12, the Rome Office

Mr. Nkomo, 65, was told when he arrived in London that he could remain for only one week. He said at that time that he would remain home as soon as he received firm assurances of his personal safety from Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. Zimbabwe officials said the assurances already have been given and the government would not negotiate with him outside of Zimbabwe.

Mr. Nkomo fled his home in Bulawayo on March 7 after government troops raided the house and shot and killed his driver. He first went to Botswana, saying be feared for his life, and from there flew to Johannes-

Swedish Public Workers Sign Pact

STOCKHOLM (AP) - Management and representatives of Sweden's public workers signed a central wage contract for 1.5 milion employees early Friday, averting selective strikes by 1,900 employees that would have halted all flights from Sweden's major airports.

Municipal workers' unions reached an agreement with the National Agency for Government Employers late Thursday night, But negotiations with the three white-collar unions on a compromise proposed by government mediators dragged on until shortly after 5 A.M., 50 initiates before security personnel and passport controllers at the four major airports were to have struck. The contract would give an average 1.4 percent monthly raise with 0.3 percent to be distributed in local negotiations.

Last Friday the Confederation of Trade Unions, representing about two million blue-collar workers, and the Swedish Employers' Federation signed a central contract that would give a 1.9 percent monthly raise.

U.S. Space Shuttle Ready to Fly

WASHINGTON (Combined Dispatches) - The new U.S. space shuttle, Challenger, and its satellite cargo were declared fit for flight Friday. The space agency said the craft would be launched April 4 for a five-day

Lieutenant General James A. Abrahamson, head of the space abuttle program for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said that further preparations must go smoothly or the flight could be post-poned again. The original launching date for Challenger was Jan. 20.

The latest problem was possible damage from a storm at the launching area Feb. 28. Sand, salt and silica particles were found on the salellite, and NATO officials thought its operations might be affected. But they said Friday that the contamination was less than feared and that the craft had been cleaned. Earlier problems with the shuttle's engines have been solved, they said.

Pentagon Study Says Haiti Wants Hero's Ashes Back to Complete a Pantheon 5-Year Military Plan Will Cost $2 Trillion

By George C Wilson WASHINGTON - The Pentagon's newest live-year plan for rearming America would cost just under $2 trillion if Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger got his way, according to an internal gui--dance document. In the document, Mr. Weinberger sets forth steadily rising budget targets for the mirrary services for fiscal 1985 through 1989.

The target would reach $464.7 billion in fiscal 1989, compared with the $274.1 billion requested for fiscal 1984, the budget now before Congress. The totals for fiscal 1985 through 1988 are the same as projected earlier this year.

This year's 109-page guidance paper, obtained by the privately owned Defense Week publication, is markedly softer in tone than the one issued to the military services last year for fiscal 1984-88. The new paper, much of it nuclassified, -avoids using the term "protracted" nuclear warfare, for example.

Mr. Weinberger said last year that the armed services must be prepared to fight a "protracted" michar war. His mention of the need for such preparations caused a controversy, even though he re-peatedly said he was not breaking any new ground in nuclear policy.

Chadli Goes to Tunis

TUNIS - President Bendjedid Chadli of Algeria arrived here Friday for a three-day visit during which he is scheduled to sign cooperation agreements with President Habih Bourguiba, officials said. Colonel Chadli's program in the Tunisian capital was not disclosed, but officials said he would con-

The United States must "develop plans to counter militarily Soviet, Cuban and Libyan forces opera-ing from Libyan bases which pose the pantheon alongside those of Alexandre Pétion, Jean-Jacques Dessalines and Henri Christophe, three a threat to U.S. or NATO forces." Mr. Weinberger stated.

Oil-Shock Absorbers

"I have a strong feeling that this will work out und that OPEC will be in the driver's seat." — the modest but real possibility of a reversal Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani.

"It's a sticky agreement, If demand doesn't pick up by summer OPEC could be headed for ... onother crisis." - John Savoy, Sun Co.

Most analysts take Sheikh Yamani's words as wishful thinking rather than sage propbecy. The agreement by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to limit production the only way it can hold the oil price floor at $29 a barrel — will be extremely hard to enforce. But before euphoria takes over, it is worth remembering some immutable facts of life in the petroleum era: any interruption of oil shipments from the Gulf, or even a modest increase in world demand, could touch off another price explosion. An aggressive policy to reduce imports is the surest way to keep the OPEC wolf oo leasb.

The new $29 benchmark reflects the unofficial discounts most producers bave been offer-ing to maintain their shares of the dwindling market. And the new quota system, which limits total OPEC production to 17.5 million barrels a day, allows for pumping three million more than the exporters were able to sell in February without any production limits. It is no wonder, then, that a lot of knowledgeable people believe that oil prices are likely to fall further, and that OPEC will remain oo the defensive for years.

Then why the need for caution? Because an adequate supply of oil at a stable price is a would be foolish. One clear risk is a wider war in the Gulf. If exports from Iran, Saudi Arabia and the other Gulf states were cut by a few million barrels a day, prices would probably take off.

Then too, the numbers suggest that even without a military shock the oil market could tighten sharply. Oil inventories are being drawn down by four million to six million barrels a day in anticipation of a further price drop. By fall, however, or sooner if the economic recovery gathers steam, refiners will have to replenish their stocks. It is possible that the extra oil will be available at bargain prices from OPEC quota cheaters, or from non-OPEC exporters. But it would be reckless to assume that.

Some relatively painless steps would help keep OPEC on the run. First, fill the strategic petroleum reserve. With enough fuel in storage, the United States could neutralize the impact of oil shocks or counter calculated attempts to raise prices. Second, just as important, tax imported oil by $10 or more per barrel. That would keep export prices low by paring demand, and it would also encourage domestic exploration.

Twice in the last decade oil shocks have triggered world recessions, destroying millions of jobs and losing hundreds of billions in output. Are we so myopic that we cannot take the most elementary precautions against a third?

Raid in Johannesburg

Five police agents of the South African gov- Herald Tribune, that find their way into ernment have raided the home, and seven raided the office, of Allister Sparks, the Washington Post's correspondent in South Africa. These police spent about two hours Wednesday in Mr. Sparks's house and a little over four in his office, going through private papers and furnishings, seizing such things as files, clippings, records of current messages and communications between The Post in Washington and Mr. Sparks in Johannesburg, and taking Mr. Sparks's typewriter when they left. The present for this seems to have been a couple of articles that Mr. Sparks had written 10 months ago.

Does that sound fishy? It should, But there is more. The law invoked to justify this ransacking so long after Mr. Sparks's purported offense says the press may not quote a "banned" person. Banned people are those who bave been formally ostracized and put under a form of bouse arrest by the South African government, which is at such pains to tell us all bow enlightened it is. Generally, South Africa correspondents for publications in the United States, in Britain and elsewhere have taken this to mean that although these people could not be quoted in the South African press, they could be quoted in articles to be printed in other countries. Such banned persons as the black political dissident Winnie Mandela, and the white Afrikaner racial reformer Beyers Naude, have frequently been quoted in some of those publications, such as the British papers and the International South Africa.

If such indirect breaches of the government's effort to maintain the kind of political silence it likes best have been prosecuted, it has been a rarity. That is why the fact that Mr. Sparks quoted Mrs. Mandela in articles published months ago in the Tribune and in the London Observer, for which be also writes, is so flimsy and unconvincing an excuse for the raid. We think they plain do tot like what Mr. Sparks has been writing and that they are trying to intimidate him. Allister Sparks is an uncompromisingly honest journalist, and anyone who tries to intimidate him happens to be setting out on a fool's mission. We could bave told the South African government that and spared it a lot of trouble. But to our mind, it is not so much what the people who authorized this police raid need to be told as what they are telling the rest of the world about themselves that is interesting. Here is a government that says to people in the United States that we Americans have got it all wrong, that it has embarked on a path toward racial reform and that, in any event, such institutions as its courts and its press are relatively free - certainly free by the standards that obtain for such things almost everywbere else.

Reagan and Morality

At his first presidential news conference, Rooald Reagan scandalized some centers of fashionable opinion by suggesting that natiooal moralities matter, and that the Soviet Union's is not to be found in the Boy Scout Handbook.

It happened again recently when the presi-dent repeated the message before the National Association of Evangelicals, meeting in Orlando. Florida. He extolled the Judeo-Christian roots of political freedom, and unabashedly proclaimed their superiority, as be sees it. to the secularist values of Soviet doctrine.

Afterward, the president's critics lodged two somewhat contradictory objections. One is that since the evangelical Christians are presumed to be a Reagan constituency, the president was merely juicing them up for political purposes. The other is that surely no contemporary president can really believe - can he? - that the East-West confrontation is some sort of Armageddon in which we battle for the Lord, and they — the Russians — for the hosts of Darkness

One problem is that the press reports such speeches in snippets, stressing provocative passages. The president was not, with his comments about the "evil" Soviet Union, dividing the world simplemindedly between light and darkness. "Our nation too," be said, "has a legacy of evil with which it must deal," including the legacy of human slavery.

Even so, the Orlando speech was high on provocative rhetoric, which makes sense if you regard the world as a provocative place just now. My own notion is that without occasionai reference to fundamental values, the great and scary conflicts of our time may come to seem mere perversities.

No state or system perfectly embodies the doctrines it professes, Judeo-Christian or Marxist-Leninist, But doctrines do differ, and the differences matter.

Strauss's Game

The oegotiations between West Germany's coalition partners on policy and the make-up of a cabinet look very much like a poker game with Franz Josef Strauss, the Christian Social leader, playing for very high stakes. His demand to be foreign minister and his threat to uncouple his party from its bigger Christian Democrat allies in the Bundestag need oot be taken at face value.

Few people, and probably not even Herr Strauss himself, could imagine Chancellor Helmut Kobl dropping Hans-Dietricb Genscher, the Free Democrat leader who risked his own and his party's poblical existence to create the present coalition, from the No. 2 post. Herr Strauss's move, highly embarrassing to Herr Kohl, can be seen more as a bid to extract the maximum influence both in policy and jobs for his party.

Herald Cribune How Opinion Polls Help Voters Tailor Their Message

PARIS — The voters of France and West Germany have delivered their message, a stern warning to President François Mitterrand from the French, and carefully balanced support for Chancellor Helmut Kohl from the West Germans.

The results seem to indicate that public opinion polls have become an important factor in refining the democratic process.

Politicians have long known how to use polls to tailor their message to the electorate, identify issues and point out their opponents' tender spots. Now, voters are learning to use them to make their answers more precise and effective. This showed demonstrably in West Germany. The two major fears before the balloting were that either no viable government could emerge if the amorphous Greens won the power balance between the two major parties, or that an absolute majority for the Christian Democrat-Christian Social Union team would give Bavaria's heavy-banded Franz Josef Strauss too much pull.

As it turned out, by rallying to the Free Democrats sufficiently to send them back to of France's two-round elections, the polls the Bundestag and oblige Chancellor Kohl to are muzzled.

Naturally, politicians who hoped for different results denounced the opinion polls that made it possible. Mr. Strauss told the electorate a week before the ballot not to believe poll results showing the Free Democrats were reviving from the deep slump that bad threatened to oust them from the legislature. If he had been believed, it would have seemed futile to support the Free Democrats and his propbecy could have become self-fulfilling.

Peter Glotz, a Social Democrat, called for a general ban on pre-election polls. The fact that they showed his party (accurately) as having support from less than 40 percent of the electorate was "an open attempt at manipulation," he asserted.

French politicians succeeded several years ago in forbidding the polls to publish late estimates, on the ground that they unduly influence voters. Two weeks before the first round is denied down-to-the-wire reports. But the French were shrewd enough to find a way around it. On the first round of nationwide municipal elections, they delivered a hefty setback to the Socialist-Communist governing co-alition. The figures said clearly that they were displeased with the way things were going. Fourteen percent of the opposition's votes came from people who voted for Mr. Mitterrand in May 1981.

Exit polls showed that a surprising 13 percent of the opposition voters and 8 percent of the government's supporters did not make up their mind until election day or a few days before, a massive floating vote.

On the second round, however, the voters shifted to indicate the result did not mean a wholesale rejection of the government and endorsement of the opposition. They tempered the message of an overwhelming first round de-feat which they had not foreseen, either by changing sides or turning up after having abstained in the first round. In Britain, according to the political scientist Ivor Crewe of Essex University, voters are also coming to rely on polls to make sure their hallots send the right signal. The rise of the Social Democratic-Liberal alliance has provoked ambiguities in what used to be almost a straight two-party system. So if they want to get rid of Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government, voters check to see whether Labor or the Alliance has the best chance of defeating the Tory candidate. Those who want to make sure Labor does not get in make a similar calculation in constituencies where it is unclear whether the Aliance or the Torics are more likely to beat La-

Drought Again Parches African Crops

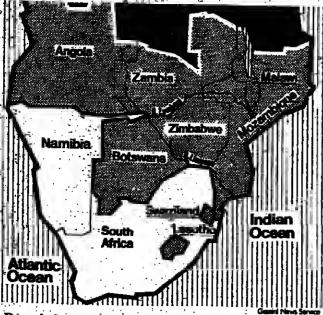

By Alan Cowell LUSAKA, Zambia - For the second successive year, drought has parched the lands of southern Afri-ca, and it has imposed itself capriciously, sparing some and breaking

It has coincided with other problems, too, that blur the shallow imprint of political independence in nations still reliant on distant and fickle forces in the industrialized

Some farmers assert that the dryness is the worst since records were first kept at the turn of the century. So they are slaughtering cattle in Zimbabwe that should have been kept for stock. Rainfall in some parts of southern Mozambique, the authorities there say, is barely a quarter of that m a good year. Crops of the white corn that is the mainstay of the region's diet will be down sharply in a swath of land that runs from South Africa through parts of Botswana, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Lesotho, Swaziland and Mozambique.

in the harsh heat of the Zambezi Valley, the river should be high on its banks now, turbulent with rain. instead, it writhes, laying bare the rocky architecture and contorted sculpture it has hewn from its bed over the centuries.

The drought has created an imredictable patchwork of worries. white commercial farmer near Lusaka was contemplating the tosal failure of his corn crop a few weeks ago, telling friends that without just one inch (2.54 centimeters) of rain he had no hope. Although free of foreign political dominance, the economies of many African nations still ebb and flow to foreign rhythms. Mismanagement in some countries, insurgency in others and political confrontation between black-ruled Africa and the white-ruled south have also hurt the region.

Reservoirs are low or dry and subterranean water reserves have fallen. Even South Africa, the most powerful agricultural force in the region, has fared badly, Western economists said. Its corn crop available for market is expected to be one-quarter of last year's levels, but still the region's biggest.

An additional factor is at play Demand is rising while crops fail. Birthrates of 3 or 4 percent are common in Africa and in Zimreplanting a meager crop of corn commercial enterprises are looted around 90,000 tons, which will while the two successive droughts have reduced production to one-not eaten in two days and no rain to leave their homes in search of in foreign currency. Assam Set To Deport Immigrants

It Will Expel Those Who Came After '71

The Associated Press NEW DELHI — Assam's chief minister said here Friday that his government would immediately begin identifying and deporting for-eigners who entered the state after 1971.

The decision, Hiteswar Saikia said, was agreed to by Prime Min-ister Indira Gandhi's central gov-ernment. It follows more than three years of anti-immigrant agitation in which more than 1,600 people have been killed

The student-led movement wants all immigrants who arrived after 1951 deported. Most of the immigrants are Moslems from what is now Bangladesh.

Mr. Saikia said a tribunal would be set up in each of Assam's 126 state assembly districts to process citizenship claims. The criteria for identifying forcign nationals still were being worked out, he said.

He also said he was willing to resume talks with leaders of the anti-immigrant drive but did not intend to approach them directly.

"I have appealed through the press" to the movement's leaders. he said.

Lagerfeld Returns With Chloé Magic

By Hebe Dorscy International Herald Tribune

DARIS — Skirts are much longer in Paris today - not that it matters. For fashion is no longer a story of hemlines. It is the spirit of clothes that counts.

With the world as Main Street, women never had it so good, and it is a question of deciding who wants what, where and why. So after the iotroverted, suppressed and somber Japanese story Thursday, came Karl Lagerfeld, recreating his own seductive version of lo vie Parisienne with one of his best Chloe collections ever.

Lagerfeld, who has been designing for several other houses lately, including Chanel, proved here that he could bandle it all - and recapture the old luxurious Chloé magic. More and more sophisticated, as well as more and more expensive. his collection fully fits the New Couture label. Lagerfeld, whose penchant for la grande vie (his mother used to dress in Paris couture houses) has never been a secret, went even further in that direction. These are 10p-dollar clothes for top-dollar markets.

A mature, secure talent, Lagerfeld bas produced a longer, leaner, strict but soft look. He did it with knits, which follow the body in mellow curves; double hems, which break up the straight-as-an-l silhouette; and frothy fabrics such as mohair.

Skirts stopped at mid-ankle, over short, supple boots — a far cry from the stiffly military. Vienna Riding School look he showed a year ago. Flattering touches were all over, from big, black velvet piclure hats (edged with a contrasting colored visor) to black cowls filled in with white. Gloves came in gold or silver leather and egret feathers sprung up on little satin hats. Diamond buttons were used lavishly. Huge taffeta bows sprouted at the neck while giant leather sashes cinched the hips. Big pearls alternated with more whimsical jewelry. such as giant diamond arrows, placed here, there and everywhere.

Lagerfeld played up the sweater, a rampant theme in Paris shows that is supposed to be even bigger at Yves Saint Laurent next Wednesday. But his were typically Chloé, whimsical and colorful. One of his favorites was bicolor - with contrasting shoulder, red with black, or mustard with brown - a trick he also used on knit dresses, which were in fact just elongated

Both suits and coats were very important at Chloé, but coats dominated the scene. They ranged all the way from three-quarter and seemingly weightless knits to more structured, double-breasted, mannish overcoats, fastened with dull

No Luck With Old Masters

By Souren Melikian . International Herald Tribune

DARIS - If French acctioneers hoped that the sinking franc would boost prices at their more glamorous sales of Old Master paintings, they must have felt scverely disappointed this week. There were no outbursts of enthusiasm on Tuesday when a small but good selection of paintings from French private collections came up at Drouot.

One painting at least should bave sold brilliantly: a landscape in the classical manner developed around 1638-40 by Claude Gellée. known as Le Lorrain in France, or Claude Lorrain in the Englishspeaking world. A Roman temple on the left side is lit up by the last rays of the sunset, while a cluster of trees on the right is already swallowed up by darkness. The low hills in the distance, suffused with a golden light, are much brighter than the foreground, as is so frequently the case with Claude's work. This may not be his most striking composition, but it is painted with the consummate skill that the master almost invariably

The picture is a relatively recent discovery, which should have given additional spice. It was first pubished in the Burlington Magazine in 1971 by the Italian scholar Marco Chiarini, and was later included by Marcel Röthlisberger in his carlogue raisonné of Clande Lorrain's oeuvre - a must, commercially

All that appears to have been disregarded by those who attended the sale. As the attractive landscape with an ideal size for museum display - about 96 by 135 centimeters (38 by 54 inches) — was held up by two Drouot porters, the auctioneer Jacques Tajan started calling out bids, looking right and then left, as if to follow his bidders' moves. Alas, it was painfully obvious to salesroom professionals that not a single bid was coming from the room, As the hammer fell, the Claude remained unsold.

For once, the fear that an export license would be denied by the French anthorities cannot be used as an excuse. The French museums agency had indicated before the auction that it would allow the picture to leave France.

The lack of international interest in the painting is partly due to an unfortunate coincidence. Two or pieces came from private sources, this goes to the trade, which is far-three other Claudes bappen to be A few could be called top-quality ahead of foreign competition.

THE ART MARKET

Old Master paintings likewise failed to command big prices. Among those that have a ready market in northern Europe and Britain, there was a very good view of a riverside harbor by the Flemish artist Theobald Michau (1676-1765). Michau's work is an interesting case of a deliberate return to the palette of the 1600s. The deep green foliage of leafy trees stands out against a receding landscape in shades of lighter blue with turquoise undertones. This gives the picture an easy, instant appeal. It hould have made more than the 180,000 francs (about $26,200) at which it was knocked down.

Only one of the three paintings with an international market fetched a high price. This is a Florentine work on panel titled "Christ Standing in Front of Pontius Pilate," which the Drouot experts at- cordingly, they date the commode It went up to 450,000 francs -a lot, considering the poorly painted faces of some of the characters.

Surprisingly, paintings by French masters that fall within the 15,000-to-70,000-frane bracket did not do better than those for which there is an international market. A good portrait of a nobleman ascribed to Robert Levrac-Tournière (1667-1752), still retaining its fine period giltwood frame, was a giveaway at 16,000 francs.

ECONOMIC SCENE By LEONARD SILK

Oil Price Choice: Break OPEC Or Work for Energy Stability

NEW YORK — Now that oil prices are coming down and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is struggling for its existence, what should be the policy of the United States and other Western countries. Do everything possible to break OPEC and drive oil prices down further, or work for improved cooperation between oil exporting and oil-importing countries in the interest of greater stability of prices and energy supplies?

A new report of the Group of 30, a high-level body of international conomic and monetary experts and government officials led by H. Johannes Witteveen, former managing director of the International Monetary Fund, recognizes that it is in the short-term interest of the importing countries that real oil prices continue to decline because this will reduce inflation, improve balances of payments and stimulate eco-

But the report contends that this conflicts with "the long-term economic interest in effecting a

if coupled with strong smooth transition from the present energy regime, which still reflects the historic reliance on low-cost en-ergy sources, to a future one likely be based on higher costs." Instahility is in the interest of neither importers nor exporters. A steep, disorderly fall in oil prices and a drop in OPEC's capital surplus, the report says, may put "additional strains on an aiready troubled financial system."

could result in another oil shock. The report says declining oil prices, if coupled with strong eco-nomic recovery in the industrial countries, could result in a dramatic increase in the demand for oil by the end of this decade. Another interruption of oil supplies would then produce another oil shock, repeating the cycle of the 1970s. Structural changes in the oil market might exacerbate price instability.

The Gulf nations will have a smaller share of world output but a bigger share of OPEC production. Because many of those countries have low share of OPEC production. Because many of those countries have low populations and big oil reserves, they should be able to shift production to stabilize the market. But because they would have a smaller share of total world output, they would have to absorb much bigger swings in definand than in the past. If they were unwilling or unable to match supply and demand, the report asserts, market instability might increase. The Group of 30 concludes: "This kind of volatile market behavior could mean disaster for the world economy and could raise the specter of energy shortages by the end of the century." To avoid this, it makes energy shortages by the end of the century." To avoid this, it makes several recommendations, including:

The industrial countries should improve their handling of oil stocks.

When prices are low, these countries should add to stocks; when prices are high, they should release oil to the market. This sounds obvious but, for political reasons, these nations have tended to do the opposite.

 Oil importers should remove financial barriers to investment by oil exporters to give the exporters incentives to produce more when the demand for oil is high and thereby acquire foreign assets that will enable them to slow production when demand is weak.

 Tacit collaboration" among importing and exporting nations should be encouraged.

The Group of 30 said an indication that such collaboration could be achieved was its own success in putting together a "study group." Meeting in turbulent times over the past three years, it apparently had some success in moderating the run-up in oil prices after the Iranian revolution and the outbreak of the Iraq-Iran war. Robert V. Roosa, a former U.S. undersecretary of the Treasury and member of the study group, indicated this week that he believed the group helped persuade OPEC to hold its marker price to $34 a barrel during a period when the spot price soared as high as $44.

Correcting the Havoc

The study group included such dignitaries from OPEC countries as Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the oil minister of Saudi Arabia, and Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, oil minister of Kuwait, as well as senior Arab monetary officials and financial heavyweights from importing na-Harmon, These included Mr. Roosa, who is a partner of Brown Brothers Harmon, and Richard Debs, president of Morgan Stanley.

But the issue facing industrial nations, now that they have OPEC over a harrel, is whether it would not be still wiser to refrain from such and let the market work - as OPEC minist insist they were doing when prices were running up. Correcting the havoc wrought by the oil price explosion may require a markedly lower level of prices, which oil producers could scarcely be expected to negotiate, even tacitly.

There are, to be sure, advantages for the United States in building its oil stockpile faster. Shutting in some high-cost oil production, as in Alaska or the North Sea, is also a form of stockpiling.

But the market, even in its turbulence, could be a better guide to oil price policy than the best-laid plans of distinguished economists and

Lever Brothers Set To Try a Comeback With New Products

By N.R. Kleinfield New York Times Service

NEW YORK - When Rinso ruled the laundry world in the 1930s and '40s, Lever Brothers, its manufacturer, was the king of the soap makers. It also had Spry. It had Lifebuoy. It had Pepsodent.

But though household names, these products are no longer the choice of that many households.

Most have lost market share to Procter & Gamble products, and the battle with that packaged-goods powerhouse has, at least in part, brought Lever low. But now with new management and a promising rester of fresh products, the company seems poised for a comeback.

In dealing with problems that culminated in losses for the last five years, Unilever, Lever's huge and sprawling British-Dutch parent, had been oddly tolerant. But in 1980, apparently fed up, it installed Michael Angus, one of its brightest British executives, as chairman, with a mandate to rebuild the company.

The most conspicuous problem has been the losses, which have continued during Mr. Angus's rule: $20.2 million pretax in 1980 and $26 million in 1981. Lever has not amounced last year's results yet, but analysts estimate a similar deficit.

However, Hercules Segales, a consumer-goods analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert and a former executive at Procter & Gamhle, predicted that Lever would make a modest amount of money this year. Lever Brothers executives did not want to be interviewed, saying that they preferred to wait for more definite signs of recovery.

When Mr. Angus took over, the bulk of Lever's losses stemmed from Imperial margarine. So in 1981, he shot down the outdated from Imperial margarine. So in 1981, he shot down the outdated Hammond, Indiana, plant that made Imperial and put out the work to contractors able to produce it more cheaply. In addition, be increased Lever's productivity by sharply cutting the payroll.

The company also has brought out several new products. Lever sells more all new products. Lever sells more than $1 billion a year of detergents, toothpastes and personal soaps, but in recent years it had been sluggish about introducing new brands in an industry that relies on them for its lifeblood. Now Lever is betting heavily on three new products — Sunlight dishwashing liquid, Shield deodorant soap and Impulse body spray. "I think once they get their act together, they can grow more rapidly than Procter," said James Witherell, who used to be Lever's marketing director in the household products division and is now a group

Lever Brothers' roots go back to 1895, when it was a sales office for its foreign parent. Under the shrewd guidance of Francis Countway, from 1913 to 1946, Lever evolved into a major success. It developed

Lux soap, Rinso laundry soap, Swan and Spry shortening - some of the most popular brands ever.

Not only did Lever products become etched in consumer minds, but so did the marketing slogans dreamed up to sell them, which raised the specter of "B.O." Lever's snappy shorthand for body odor, or posed the question about "where the yellow went when you brush your teeth with Pepsodent."

Lever's downfall began shortly after World War II, when Charles Luckman was running the company. The product that started the skid was fresh from the laboratories of Procter & Gamble. Its name

The first synthetic laundry detergent, Tide won over consumers across the country. Lever Brothers, presuming that Tide soon would peter out, did nothing. Ton late, it realized that the detergent was no passing fancy, and it hurriedly brought out Rinso Blue and Surf. But Tide already had become impregnable. In 1949, Lever lost money for the first time, and Charles Luckman lost his job.

Then Lever roared back, buying the detergent All from Monsanto in 1957. Though All was a money loser for Monsanto, the detergent held a huge market share that Lever used to good advantage. It also brought out a number of new products: Praise, Stripe (a toothpaste with a stripe through it), Dove and Wisk.

But in 1960, Procter scored a second direct hit on Lever when its Crest toothpaste captured a seal of approval from the American Den-(Continued on Page 9, Col.3)

In the United States, the specu-lation took on a different aspect. In Chicago, Tully Davia, a currency analyst with American Trans-Euro Corp., said, "There is so much doubt about what's going to occur next that people are just going to stay in dollars over the weekend.

Friday night, Finance Minister Jacques Delors of France said a possible devaluation of the French franc need not represent a political setback for France, providing it does not hurt the government's efforts to reduce inflation. He made the remarks on a TV debate.

EMS rules oblige a member country with a currency that diverges sharply from the rest, putting other currencies under pressure, to take action to rectify the situation. France has spent a great deal of money propping up the franc, and in the last few days, the West German Bundesbank has weaker currencies.

U.S. Says Wholesale Prices Up

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — U.S. wholesale prices rose a slight 0.1 percent in February as the steepest foodprice jump in 10 months more than cancelled out further declines in gasoline and fuel-oil costs, the government said Friday.

The small rise in the Producer Price Index for finished goods, coming after a record I percent drop in January, bolstered economists' predictions that the wholesale inflation rate might be down substantially from last year's moderate 3.5 percent.

At the White House, Larry Speakes, the presidential spokesman, called the new report "more good news on the economy.

"We have made substantial progress in the fight against inflation," he said. In another report Friday, the Commerce Department said Americans' personal income rose a mere 0.1 percent in February, down from the 0.2 percent increase of the previous month. Consumers' spending grew less than 0.1 percent, compared with a 0.6 percent increase in January.

The lackluster income report was likely to give little comfort to analysts who have said that they would feel better about the economy's prospects for rebounding from the recession if consumers were making more and spending more than in recent months.

In the February price report, the department said energy costs over-all fell 2.9 percent, the third straight monthly decline. Energy prices fell a record 4.2 percent in the previous month.

In its new report, the department provided these other details on February price changes:

• Food prices overall rose 0.6

percent, the sharpest monthly jump since the 1.6 percent increase of last April. Food prices fell 0.2 percent in January.

U.S.-China Talks On Textiles Halt

United Press International BELJING — U.S. and Chinese negotiators ended a fifth round of talks Friday without agreement in a bitter dispute over U.S. textile Neither side released details, but the chief U.S. negotiator reported some progress in the talks to resolve the most serious U.S.-Chinese trade conflict since the two countries resumed commercial relations in 1971.

Progress was made but differences remain to be resolved," said Peter Murphy, leader of the U.S. negotiating team of industry advisers and government officials. "Both sides expressed interest in continuing the negotiations. The U.S. side is confident that at some point an greement will be reached."

The Chinese did not comment immediately. The date of the next round, which is expected to be in Washington, was not announced.

The fifth round of talks began March 11 and ended in a marathon session that lasted into the early hours Friday.

Negotiators met daily in an attempt to break B deadlock over quotas imposed to protect the recession-wracked U.S. textile industry while giving China what it feels is a fair share of the .S. market. Diplomatic sources said both sides held firmly to their positions but tried to "sharpen and redefine" figures in an attempt to compromise. The Reagan administration has vowed to protect the U.S. textile industry by holding im-ports of Chinese textiles to an annual growth rate of 1 to 2 percent. China wants a 6 percent rate, arguing that as late-comer to the U.S. market it should be given special consideration.

China depends heavily on textile sales in for-eign trade. Its U.S. textile exports represent about a third of China's total trade with the United States, Last year China sold about 700 million square yards of textiles, worth more than $800 million, to the United States.

The talks began in August. The last round broke down Jan. 13, two days before a Reagan administration deadline for a new agreement.

Hoesch Says Salzgitter Deal Off

BONN (Renters) — Saizgitter has withdrawn from a plan to merge its steel mait, Peine Salzgitter, with Hoesch, Hoesch spokesman Jochen Oertmann said Friday. He said a letter of intent on the merger was due to have been signed this week.

A Salzgitter spokesman said the company would not confirm or deny the withdrawal before talks with the West German government. Salzgitter's sole owners

An independent steel report in January proposed a Hoesch-Salzgitter-Klöcknet-Werke merger under a plan to streamline West German steel, but Hoesch rejected ties with Klöckner.

Banks Reject ERT's Debt Plan

MADRID (Reuters) — Creditor banks of Spain's alling chemicals con-glomerate. Union Explosivos Rio Tinto, have rejected a restructuring plan proposed by the company but have agreed to hold new talks on debt repayments, company sources said Friday.

ERT's 125 creditor banks unanimously rejected the plan presented by ERT's new president, José Maria Escondullas, at a meeting Thursday night and a 13-bank steering committee was meeting again Friday to discuss guidelines for further negotiations, the sources said. ERT's plan proposed splitting it into core and "nonfundamental divisions" and setting the peseta's parity at its level on March 31 for repayment of ERT's 123-billion-peseta ($939-billion) debt, on which it stopped principal repayments last fall.

Failed Tennessee Bank Is Sued

KNOXVILLE, Tennessee (AP) — Directors of the failed United American Bank of Knoxville extended up to 40 percent of the bank's $475 million in loans to eight associates of Jake Butcher, its chairman, or his banker brother, a lawsuit has charged.

The 25-page U.S. District Court lawsuit, which asked no specific mon-ey damages, was filed Thursday by Thomas F. Kohntopp and Wardell Milan, who own a combined 1,074 common shares in the bank, which was declared insolvent Feb. 14.

The suit named the bank, Jake Butcher, his brother C.H. Butcher Jr. their father C.H. Butcher Sr., the bank's chief operating tarner and ntive vice president, the bank's directors, and Ernst & Whinney, the accounting firm that certified UAB-Knoxville's 1982 financial statement.

IBM also accused Cybernex of San Jose, California, and the five former IBM executives who had founded Cybernex, of misappropriation of trade secrets and unfair competition. The complaint, which seeks an ajunction and unspecified damages, involved the principal part of a Supprer disk memory device known as the "head."

Slavenburg's Bank Discloses Fraud

ROTTERDAM (Reuters) - Slavenburg's Bank said Friday that fraud involving transfers of millions of dollars took place in the past few weeks at its international transfers department in Rotterdam.

The total involved in the transfers was 365 million but any net loss would be far less than this, with the bank hoping to recover all or most of the money, a bank spokesmam said. Police were seeking an employee who had disappeared, a police spokesman said.

Financial Federation Being Sold

CULVER CITY, California (AP) — Great Western Financial has agreed to acquire Financial Federation, based here, for about $185 million in stock, creating the third-largest U.S. savings and loan association, the companies announced Thursday.

The plan calls for the exchange of 1.8 shares of Great Western stock for each of the 4.2 million outstanding shares of Financial Federation. At a meeting Thursday, the Financial Federation board rejected a merger proposed last Friday by Gibraltar Financial.

Reviewed by Colman McCarthy DEEP, deep down, everyone for which an ode, not an elegy, is to was right: "The bicycle is the nobinvention of mankind." But until James E. Starrs, a professor of law and forensic science at George Washington University, wheeled of the world's sprightliest literature oo the bicycle, few had any idea that a roadful of great writers have been recording their thoughts about the machine and its plea-

THE NOISELESS TENOR

The Bicycle in Literature

08816.

Edited by James E. Starrs. 389 pp. 525.

You could eliminate the writers of the last 100 years who did not produce prose or poetry about the bicycle and still have a vibrant literary world with those who did: Dylan Thomas. George Bernard Shaw, Iris Murdoch, Kurt Vonnegut, Samuel Beckett, Vladimir Nabokov, Alan Sillitoe, Henry Miller. Heinrich Boll, D.H. Lawrence. Kenneth Rexroth, Stephen Crane. Mark Twain, Aldous Huxley. Simone de Beauvoir, Ernest Hem-ingway and S.K. Narayan.

These are a few in the cycle of entertaining selections that Starrs bas chosen. His book could have been triple the size and not suffered in quality.

When Starrs began his research. "it never dawned on me that suitable materials would be found io such galactic profusion." While thumbing through the card cata-logue at the Library of Coogress, he discovered that loog-distance cyclists were a major grouping themselves: The Library was "crammed with books extolling this hero or that of cross-country or round-the-world bicycle travel. One husband-and-wife learn went so far as to claim the round-trip cross-country speed title for a tan-

Starrs, 53, has put in his own miles in three journeys across the United States by bicycle. A Spriogfield. Virginia, resident, he commuted 30 miles a day, in all weather. Three of his children joined him on one Washington-to-California sharpened the spirit of his daugh-ter, Monica, who made the trip at age 15 and would down by writing this poem:

Pick up those burrowed thoughts. as you scrape out pieces of caged-in mind. Seek out and attack that point of no return where you'll smother empty miles with spreading wings to pass sechuled car dreams on a 10-speed freedom fit er.

Starrs takes the title of his anthology from a line in Thomas Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard." ("Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife. Their sober wishes never learn d to vale of life/They kept the noiseless teoor of their way."t

It wasn't that Starrs discovered that bicyclists were buried in Gray's churchyard, but that as "Gray's poem focuses on the unheralded lives of the Everymen of society, this book speaks of the nust for The Washington Post Writproletarial of wheels. The bicycle is ers Group and a staff writer for The the common man among vehicles. Washington Post.

knows that William Saroyan order . . . The words noiseless tenor suggest the subdued whirring of the bicycle in cootrast to the noisome clamor of other more modern forms of vehicular conveyoolo the scene with this anthology action of the internal combustion eogine. The word noiseless was carefully chosen by Gray; it was substituted for the word silent in an earlier draft of the poem. The term is a particularly apt modifier in the title to this volume, too, for it has a power that silent lacks, and it sets the bicycle apart from the ceaseless clamor of modern society.

Starrs, a modest man who cherishes a modest machine, makes no claims of covering the whole of bi-cycle literature. But he haso't missed much. His introductions to the seven sections of his book are lay-bys of facts that would otherwise rest forever on the shoulders of literature's main roads.

Edmund Wilson was a lifelong cyclist who never learned to drive a car. Tolstoy took up the bicycle at age 67, partly to put some joy into his life in his grief over the death of his 7-year-old son, Vanichka. Henry Adams, also in mourning, following his wife's death, learned to bicycle at 50 "as a means of new life. Nothing else offered itself." In The Sun Also Rises," Ernest Hemingway has a long section on bike racing. Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir were another biking couple. Alan Sillitoe, who wrote of bicyclists before lonely long-distance runners, quit school at 14 to work in a oicycle factory.

Perhaps the most famous collision io Wesiern literature occurred when George Bernard Snaw and Bertrand Russeli upended each other. In "Portraits From Memory," Russell writes: "At this time [Shaw] and I were involved in a bicycle accident, which I feared for a moment might have brought his career to a premature close. He was only just learning to ride a bicycle. trip. The experieoce seems to have and he rao into my machine with such force that he was hurled through the air and landed oo his back 20 feet from the place of the collision. However, he got up compleiely undurt and continued on his ride; whereas my bicycle was smashed, and I had to return by train. It was a very slow train, and Bt every station Shaw with his bicycle appeared on the platform, put his head into the carriage and jeered. I suspect that be regarded the whole incident as proof of the virtues of vegetarianism."

Unlike Shaw. Starrs isn't out to prove anything Why should he? Nothing is doubted. The bicycle." he writes in undeniable truth. "frees the mind for ruminations which the workaday world suppresses. Without the bicycle to listray/Along the cool sequester'd berate such thoughts, they might well go unnoticed and uninvesti-gated. And this sparkling anthology uncollected.

A rugby crowd is a shrewd animal. It can how and hav like fury, seeming to enjoy itself no end, and then disperse in something like in-difference. The test of quality, former international referee Georges Domercq remarked recently, is whether the game brings a smile as you drive home.

The expert manner of the Welsh victory over previously unbeaten Ireland in Cardiff on the fourth of the annual five Saturdays, March 5, caused pleasure along with aprehension in France.

"So now it's just like the good old days again," exulted Jacques Fouroux, the 35-year-old French coach, referring to the joint Welsh-French supremacy of the middle and late 70s, when he was France's captain. "We'll have to play well to beat this Welsh team. We can." France and Wales have both recovered that not-so-old look of world-beaters this season, although each has stumbled once - the young Welsh when they let England draw in Cardiff on Feb. 5, and the French when they helped Ireland bear them in Dublin on

The upshot in terms of the final standings, is a triangular race to the wire for first place. Wales finishes alone on top if it beats Branch scored 22 for the Terra-France, or if it draws while Ireland pins (20-9) who were to meet Housand England draw or England wins. Campbell aside, the Five Nations stars are in Paris - Welsh scrumhalf Terry Holmes and French fullback Serge Blanco, but also tighthead props Robert Pa-paremborde and Graham Price, and French No. 8 Jean-Luc Joinel. The French backs form the best attacking unit the championship has seen in years. Wales, led by No. 8 Eddie Butler, showed cool tactical flair and discipline against Ireland.

So low was public regard for revamped Wales (five rookies, a new captain, a new coach) after the draw with England that its emphatic comeback — a surprise defeat of Scotland in Edinburgh, then the 23-9 demolition of Ireland in Cardiff - could seem to leave the Welsh with nothing to lose in Paris. The French, after throwing away their grand slam chances in Dublin, are under heavy pressure to win. That pressure equation could

— From "Forbidden Broadway." 01983 Gerard Alessandrini, to the tune of "I Am a Pirate King"

By Megan Rosenfeld Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The wondrous Kevin Kline sat in a hotel chair, looking more uncomfortable than glorious. The sleek and dashing handsomeness he evokes on stage and screen has somehow disappeared, replaced by a soft-spoken Jewish-Catholic boy of 35, who has such a gift that people even remember his auditions 10 years later.

After a decade of theater credits, which gets you respect but no complimentary champagne in the hotel, he is suddenly "hot," newly visible as the extravagantly theatrical Pirate King in the movie of "The Pirates of Penzance" and as the darkly handsome lover of "Sophie's Choice."

At this point, when he can still go to a restaurant or a ball game without being recognized and people still confuse him with Calvin Klein, he regards his growing renown with a mixture of delight and anxiety.

"I want to have my cake and eat it, too," he said. "I want to be famous enough that I have a shot at the best scripts, on the stage without playing the part of movie and on film. Unfortunately, the stars, it's not just the hype maprice you have to pay for that is a certain degree of pain."

There are those who predict he will be the finest actor in America. It is a prediction not made lightly — not by the new fans, like the high-school girls in the halcony at a recent benefit screening of "Pirates," who applauded tentatively when his fore the film and screamed when it came on at the end, nor by the directors and producers who are beckoning from the golden avenues of Hollywood.

The play "Loose Ends," "I remember going to see him afterwards and saying, 'Kevin, you can do anything.' It's very hard to find a young leading man in the American theater. name flashed on the screen be-

Kevin Kline: Film fame after a decade on the stage.

They are the ones who are one was Chris Piummer. He can going to have a hard time with Kevin Kline because he doesn't want to be what they want him to he. He is one of the new breed of serious actors - like Meryl Streep, who plays opposite him in "Sophie's Choice," or William Hurt, co-star of "The Big Chill," Kline's latest movie — who want the glory but not the fame and who are trying to bargain with the system, to get the great parts without playing the part of movie

chine, which they find bas little to do with the craft of acting, but practicality as well. "When you lose your anonymity," he said, "you lose a valuable tool for an actor - to be able to observe without people acting funny." "I saw him at Juilliard in 'A School for Scandal," recalled

Alan Schneider, who directed him in the play "Loose Ends." "I be the finest actor in the American theater." Schneider would like to direct Kline in "Hamlet."

"He's a man that has just begun," said Alan Pakula director of "Sophie's Choice." "As the saying goes, 'You ain't seen noth-in' yet.' Pakula already has an-other film in mind for Kline.

Kline calls forth such superlatives because he combines the best technique, which he learned at Juilliard and refined over four years of touring in repertory with The Acting Company, with emo-tional depth and wit — not to mention good looks and what Pakuia calls "wonderful old-fashioned glamour." Directors love him because he is willing to take risks and because he surprises them. "A lot of actors hate me because I make such demands on them," said Schneider, "Kevin made demands on me." "One thing I like about him is that he's not afraid to make fun of his own persons in public," said Pakula. "He's one of the few do is keep doing it.

cases of actor's narcissism who brings out affectionate feelings. and that's because whatever extravagant thing he's doing, he never takes space away from anyone else. Whenever I need a good laugh, I can call him up and even if he's not there, I can listen to the message on his answering machine, and it will cheer me up.

Poor Kevin Kline. He likes the attention, but be doesn't want to appear immodest. He doesn't believe that actors should talk about themselves, but he feels he must, to help sell his products. The fates have conspired to push him center stage, but he has not yet achieved the kind of instant recognition he so fears. "Recently," he said wryly, "I was calling someone at a hotel in New York, and they weren't there so I asked the operator to take a message: 'Just say Kevin Kline called.' She says 'Not THE Kevin Kline!' And I said, 'Well, I don't know, who do you mean?" And she said. The pants guy."

Although be's had his share of awards. Kline said that they are one of his least favorite parts of show business. The question be hated most on a recent trip to Los Angeles (during which he spent several evenings picking up awards for Meryl Streep) was: Do you think you will get an Academy Award nomination for "Sophie's Choice?"

"I really didn't expect one.

think my part in that movie is funny in a way - mind you I'm not crazy about what I did - I thought, gee, it would be great if I could sneak a little nomination in because it is very flashy, a great part — but the movie's not built around Nathan. And it's too hig a part to be in the supporting category. So anyway I did not expect a nomination . . . I really didn't expect it. And I didn't get it! One of those terrible expectations that were fulfilled."

Kline is waiting to decide what will be next, staying in New York, reading scripts and books and practicing the piano. He is not married, although he has had long-term relationships with ac-tresses Patti LuPone and Mary Beth Hurt.

Meanwhile, he is where he wants to be. Now — whatever he's been doing — all he has to

After a boardroom struggle prompted by poor audience ratings, Jay, 45. an- believed to be the last person to recommending that he be replaced hy another board member, Lord and British Rail chief. Despite its 1982. lineup of television stars, including David Frost, the channel's peak audience was 400,000 for the week ending March 6, compared to the 1.7 million showing of BBC's "Breakfast Time," which was launched mid-January. The station's top two female presenters, Anna Ford and Angela Rippon, joined a demonstration of 20 staffers outside the London studio after Friday morning's show. "If we were opening a supermarket, we wouldn't expect to be making a profit after six weeks," said Ford. There has been a great deal of treachery in the company." "Peter Jay is being made a scapegoat and he isn't the man who should be going," said Rippon.

The actor James Garner beat a $12-million damage suit that was brought by a man he admitted punching during a golf tournament, then thanked the jury in Salinas, California, by signing autographs.
